He just said he wanted to learn. He doesn't want to be called the guitarist of this group, but he's learning and practicing." "I guess he's getting there, because it's been a little while since he started learning." "He's learning and he's growing." "He's just learning more and more. He's expanding his horizons all the time." "He wants to learn other things, but at the same time, he wants to learn and do music." "I'm trying to teach him how to build out his own music, or write his own music," he told MTV. "He wants to go as far as he can in music and beyond. I'm trying to guide him, and let him know, 'You can do whatever you want.' "I'm trying to give him more input, and I want him to stay with it. Like right now, he's working on his guitar, and he's playing some kind of stuff. I'm like, 'You keep that up, it's going to be so good.' He's going to be in it and he's going to learn from it." Bret also discussed the future of Metric as a trio, with drummer Chris Murphy and bassist Sarah Neufeld due to leave after their performance on the Rock in Rio festival in Brazil. "We have been working on new music, doing demos," he said. "It's definitely what we're gonna be focusing on for the foreseeable future." When asked if the remaining trio are more comfortable playing the music they are being asked to do, Bret replied: "Yeah. We're just bringing the show on a little more as a trio, and e79caf774b
