It's back to work for the majority of us in the Christmas shopping rush and also many events for Christmas shoppers and visitors are being held between now and Christmas Day. One question that we are often asked is -"Should you charge for your Christmas display at your business?" The answer is yes you should charge for your Christmas display so that you have some extra income on Christmas Day. Is it Ethical to Charge for Christmas Displays? It's becoming a common practice for retailers to charge for Christmas decorations and displays. I think it's great that retailers are charging for their Christmas displays as it's a great way to raise some extra money for charity. It's also a great way for customers to see that you're trying to be more cost effective. However, just because you want to raise some extra money for charity you shouldn't have to charge more than you are paying for your Christmas display. Of course you should charge a fair price for your Christmas display, but you shouldn't charge more for your display than you are paying for it. Just don't charge more than you are paying for it because you are asking your customers to pay more for your display which in turn takes more money out of their pockets. Is It Ethical to Charge for Christmas Displays? To ask this question I've decided to write this article. In this article I'm going to answer the question "Is it Ethical to Charge for Christmas Displays?". I'm also going to give you some ideas on how to do this without charging too much. I'm hoping that my answer to this question will help small business owners and business managers to charge for their Christmas display without going overboard. You shouldn't charge more for your Christmas display than you are paying for it. If you have a high end decoration, it's ok to charge for it. If your Christmas display is the average, charge the c6a93da74d
