To monitor the effect of propofol on muscle twitches (to determine shivering and fasciculation), the amplitude of the EMG wave should be measured. In other words, the waveform should be prolonged as much as possible so that the impression of a shivering twitch is eliminated. These measurements can be performed using surface electromyography equipment. Surgery is generally preformed under local anesthesia. For successful completion of the procedure, ideal recovery room conditions are important. The room should have sufficient lighting, comfortable furnishings, and adequate temperature. The patient should have a surgical positioning blanket and a stable mattress. During recovery, the patient should have plenty of fluids, a warm blanket or continuous hot air breathing system, and pain medication. Recovery period {#Sec6} ----- Spinal anesthesia is generally regarded as a safe and effective technique for total knee arthroplasty. Most patients can awake, cough, and talk within 5 min of injection. They can also walk with or without assistance within 20--30 min. The average recovery time for spinal anesthesia is approximately 1 h. Complications {#Sec7} ----- Postdural puncture headache is a self-limiting condition and can be treated with nonsteroidal analgesics. Postoperative nausea and vomiting (PONV) can be avoided by meticulous observation and prophylaxis \[[@CR e79caf774b
