Do you ever read reviews that are too negative? Or do you sometimes read a good review and think, "Was this person too enthusiastic?" I rarely feel like I'm doing either of those things, but I've been reading the reviews on a little book I really like and I'm reminded of that pretty often. I learned how to take pictures and compile a book to send to my parents for Christmas with this book. I found a fun website called Complete Me. Your photo goes on a big map and you take the pictures you like. Then you go to a website and pick what you want them to say about your book and you get points for making your pictures look like you took them. As I read the review of my book (called "Fun To Read"), I knew what the review was going to say and I started to feel anxious. But it sounded so good that I felt like I had to read it anyway. Fun to Read takes a cute story about a little girl and her Dad who takes his adventures to fix up their house and end up being a monster hunter. The illustrations are incredible - there are monsters all over and the way they're animated is really fun. The review is actually pretty accurate - though it's a bit long, so here are the positives: - A boy, Ben, helps the little girl out and he becomes her sidekick. - The illustrations are very, very good. There are some fun details, like the fingerprints on the door. - There are some neat moments, like when the little girl finds her dad and starts singing. - The story is amusing, but not too maudlin and never saccharine. - There is a nice play on the word "fun" - though not in a weird way, it just means "to be enjoyable" and the little girl really is. Here are the negatives: - The story - while lighthearted and amusing, it wasn't quirky enough for me. It's cute, but not fresh. - There isn't a lot of world building in the book, so I wasn't very impressed with the setting. The people and places were interesting, but it wasn't as detailed as I would have liked. - c9d1549cdd

The trading and exploration of space requires vast amounts of time. Or rather, the non-trading and exploration of space. That's where Stellar Tactics comes in. Discover and build your own home, mine resources, and manage your fleet using a turn-based strategy approach. At first glance, Stellar Tactics looks a bit like X3, which is great because that's what inspired them. Stellar Tactics is a turn-based strategy game where instead of the typical 3D mouse view, the game is played in 2D from a top down perspective. All your characters, your fleet, and even your ships move down the mouse map in turn based turn simulation. A turn based game means that you'll spend your time working out what your next move will be rather than sitting in front of a computer making a move for the next 3 hours. A turn-based approach will naturally lead to deeper gameplay by requiring you to think about your next move rather than jumping in and making the impulse decision that you have been craving. The lack of the typical single player role-playing game elements gives Stellar Tactics a fresh new approach to the space trading. You are the captain of your own ship, which is a colony ship, a transport vessel, or a mining vessel. You have your crew on board and there is no story or quest to follow, you are the hero of your own tale. Which is exactly where the strategy comes in. You will use the skills and resources you find in the Star Systems to forge new equipment, support your crew, build new ships and upgrade your technology. To do that you will need to consider your game options: Each 3rd party and faction in Stellar Tactics has their own technology tree, with different benefits and drawbacks. You will need to manage and upgrade your gear and ships to utilize the various technologies the different factions and 3rd party have to offer. "AZIMUTH" is a combat mechanism based on how the members of your team work together and complement each other. There will be multiple kinds of combat that will be in play in the game. The game will use a "two-dimensional" map that will be revealed at run time, but will hold multiple "layers". Zones can be crafted, and traps can be placed that will reveal the layers of the map in time to enable your team to hide and/or go on the offensive. Your enemy can also use the same mechanic. The Team Management system will be implemented, as well as a journal that tracks events,

, published in December of this year, was a tough one to read. Sadly, a new book, The Misadventures of Etan Iles, worse still, clearly involving a sixteen-year-old, will shock many people who read it... I've both read the book and interviewed its publisher, and you can have the first edition, if you want, from August this year, and the second just in time for Christmas (and maybe, just maybe, this book will give Gox a clue where they are). Coins in the open air, the smell of wood, a view out of the window to the trees in full leaf rustling in the breeze, a reading light, a cup of tea on the table, blue skies a bit cloudy... red clay on the floor, I think a few more arrows lying around waiting to be shot... First of all, let's add to the hoopla, I mean hoopla€€€: it's a strange day, I am in Paris, the press conference just finished, and you know what that means? It means I have to get the fuck up, because it's my first real day on the beach, the runway, the road, the crunch road, as they now call it. So I do. And it is fucking amazing, because you know what kind of person I am; I am going to spend two days on the beach with Frank a couple of times a year, and I am very, very, very pumped up to go and see a demonstration of what it is to sit here and play with the change that people have thrown at you, while someone stands over you shouting about some obscure piece of text on the bottom of every coin, or the date on the back of every coin: 'THE DATE ON THE COIN! THE DATE ON THE COIN! OH NO, LOOK OVER THERE, IT'S THE DATE ON THE COIN!' And then looking up at a wall, between 50 and 200 metres high, with all these coins in it and the numbers of people who own them. And wondering how many children are playing with them. Because I've just thrown €75 in there, that was my thinking the morning after my pyjama party: games at that level are messy, very messy, and the people calling you to check your numbers don't understand that, so what they want to do is walk around and stand on these piles of coins to make sure

This is World War 2 as it should have been! Players are given a choice of American, British, German, and Soviet equipment and a suite of characters to command them from... be it generals, soldiers, airmen, or priests. More difficult upgrades and equipment can be unlocked as the campaign progresses and players can equip up to 3 branches at once, mixing and matching the units from those branches. Players can create formations or squads with their units, giving new strategic options and increasing the number of units available. Player forces can head to the frontline to defend the trenches, attack the enemy in the open, set up ambushes, counter attacks, harass the enemy in the rear, or use special tactics to strike from the flanks. Players can build new equipment or purchase/buyhold captured items to kit up their units. Players can then use their new equipment to build new equipment or use them on captured items. Players can carry a variety of special weapons to disrupt enemy lines and control the battlefield. Airborne and artillery units are reinforced with these weapons to make them more potent. Players can build forts, airfields and railways to create strong defensive or offensive positions on the map. Players will be able to use the cover of jungle, hills, buildings and rivers to their advantage in the defence of their trench lines, and the offensive to carry out fierce assaults. Players will be able to call for fire missions to bomb their enemies and cripple their ability to fight. Players can also call for paratroopers to drop on the enemy to disrupt their ability to fight. Each unit will be unique, and will provide specific strategic bonuses. Players will be able to build bases where they can repair their units and replenish their supplies. Players can use their supplies to build new bases, to refill their units, or to purchase new equipment. Players will be able to gain special skills and improve their units. Players can also acquire new special equipment to improve their abilities. Players will be able to direct their allied soldiers to fly aircraft across the map, using them as cover and to attack enemy forces. Players will be able to influence other players by being good or bad! Players can be helpful or unhelpful, friendly or unfriendly, to units of the same or different branches! Players will be able to assign targets to friendly units. Players will be able to move friendly units around the map to better position them to take out their targets. Players will be able to talk to their
